Tells of Fighting in Treeless, Hot Land(Note:—Following is the second of the war log sent from the Spanish battlefield by H. R. Knickerbocker, famous roving correspondent of International News Service.)By H. R. Knickerbocker

(Copyright 1936 by I. N. S.)SEVILLE, Sept. 15.—(INS).—"A bird has to bring his dinner with him when he visits Spain." This old peasant proverb was made to fit the landscape beneath us as we flew across old Castile and Leon southeast for Lisbon, and looked down on treeless land so dry and bare it could not support a goat.
The land was like a dead leaf. Even at 6,000 feet altitude we were hot.We skirted the anti-aircraft batteries of Valladolid and Salamanca and I thought of old Professor Miguel De Unamuno down there in his rector's study at the venerable University of Salamanca, and of how he had told me a short while ago that life was essentially tragic. Spain is certainly getting her share of tragedy.She stayed out of the great war and many said it was a sign that Spain was wise, had learned the lesson that killing is futile. Now Spaniards are killing, not a foreign enemy, but themselves at the rate of 1,000 a day, which is a higher rate per head of population than any country suffered in the great war.
It is a greater speed of killing than we had in our own civil war, and if it were to go on for the length of our four years, Spain would lose around 1,500,000 dead.Happily there is no prospect that it could last so long, although Spaniards are beginning gloomily to predict that this is the beginning of the end for Europe and means the start of this century's thirty years war. They say the great war to come will not be "to end war" but to end civilization, and that is not a new thought. But they declare confidently that the lineup will not be on nationalist lines but will be simply between Red and White, as it is today in Spain.We left Spain over the frontier town of Ciudad Rodrigo and looked back as long as we could admire its perfectly preserved and semi-modernized city walls which make it a combination of mediaeval town and up-to-date fortress. Over the Portuguese border we flew into a green land clustered with vines and fruit trees. Sailing on down until we hit the Tagus River we followed that stream to Lisbon, and landed there in a scorching sun on a field choking with dust.A Portuguese plane was about to take off for Tangier and amongst its passengers I met a friend who had just come out of Badajoz, the Spanish fortress town on the Portuguese border which the Whites took with the Foreign Legion after the bitterest fighting of the war. My friend said that an estimate of 2,000 dead in the fighting and subsequent executions would be the minimum.Bad news for me was the fact I had come to Portugal to discover that it is impossible now to telephone from Lisbon to abroad because the line runs over Madrid. Furthermore, any telegrams filed in Portugal are subject to the Portuguese censorship which is if anything more rigid than the Spanish one. The Portuguese dictatorship is reported to be benevolent, but not so towards the press which is kept under strictest control. As a dictatorship the Lisbon government is naturally sympathetic towards the Spanish Whites and the Lisbon radio is as strong in tone as the White stations in Burgos or Seville.Gil Robles, one of the chief White leaders and head of the Catholic clirical party, has his headquarters in Lisbon where he supervises the gathering of funds from abroad for the White cause. Lisbon makes no pretense of neutrality in her sentiment and the bookstores have their windows full of White pamphlets and are decorated with the White colors, orange and gold.
There was no sense in staying in Lisbon at all after learning the hopelessness of the communications, but the Portuguese airdrome authorities refused to let us depart until the next day. Of sixteen hours spent in Lisbon, five were spent negotiating with the police, airdrome and customs authorities, although our total baggage consisted of comb, brush, razor and toothbrush.Lisbon's airport is the worst situated in the world, a full hour's drive from town through the most offensive suburbs of pig sties and garbage dumps.
But the city itself, lying in a curve and built up the side of a hill, was glorious in the golden sunshine of just before dusk. We ate our only meal of the day, an early dinner in a semi-roof garden

Damaged in Hold-UpA new tractor-trailer was stopped on Bristol Pike near the high bridge, Tullytown, early this morning, by a number of unidentified men, who ordered the driver from the cab and proceeded to smash the mechanism and windows of the cab so that the vehicle was unfit to drive.The truck is owned by the Motor Truck Express Company, with offices in York, Pa.The driver of the vehicle, according to the reports, was stopped early this morning and ordered from his cab by five men. The men then proceeded to demolish the cab with hammers.
The windshield, dash board, windows and fenders were dented and broken.
The gas lines were disconnected and part of the carburetor was destroyed.The truck was towed to Bristol. Another tractor was put on the trailer and the driver left with this combination.One truck driver standing near the wrecked cab was heard to remark this morning that the concern owning the demolished vehicle refused to grant its drivers the $1 increase in weekly wages agreed upon last evening at a session in Philadelphia, at which

DUE TO LIGHTNINGQuarterly Report of the Fire Marshal Shows 15 Barns and
One House Burned

MOTORISTS A MENACE

PLUMSTEADVILLE, Sept. 15.—A fire loss totaling $91,000 during the summer is attributed to electrical storms and the loss is almost equal to a yearly loss of $96,000, according to figures reported at a quarterly meeting of the Bucks County Firemen's Association, held here Saturday night.Submitting his report for the past three months, Fire Marshal William L.
Stackhouse impressively stated that July 11 eleven barns were burned and August 16, four barns and one house were destroyed by lightning.Insurance on the 22 barns, which were destroyed since the June meeting amounted $73,000. Of the number of barns destroyed, at least ten are being built or have been completed.The death of a small girl, near Buckmanville, was reported as that of the human toll exacted.Fire Marshal Stackhouse stated that dams for fire prevention can be built with the aid of PWA funds only if the owner of the land agrees to deed perpetually that area to the federal government.That the firemen of Bucks county have put up long enough with the carelessness and thoughtlessness of people who retard the progress of fire apparatus getting to the scene of the fire and sensational thrill seekers who jam the highways, culminated in a drastic effort to remedy this evil. President James E. Groome, of Yardley, appointed Fire Marshal William L. Stackhouse, chairman, and Chiefs Raymond Strunk, of Quakertown, and Lloyd Crouthamel, of Dublin, as members of a committee, to contact the newly-formed Bucks County Association.It is not in the boroughs or towns in Bucks county that the firemen undergo the hardship of practically being mobbed, but in the rural sections, where the right to prosecute the offenders is not so readily defined.That it is unlawful to drive nearer a scene of a fire than a distance of 1000 feet was brought out during the discussion.The firemen also mentioned the fact that whenever a State policeman or

WATER EQUIPMENT

TULLYTOWN, Sept. 15.—A number of much needed improvements have been made to the buildings of Tully-town public schools during the past few weeks. One of these was a new heating system. The local schools will now be heated by oil, burners having been installed in each building. This will eliminate the cold school rooms which the pupils have experienced in past years.Another improvement was the installation of two new lavatories. This was brought about by changing the cloak rooms in the little building. Two toilets, and a wash bowl, with complete fixtures, have been installed in each. Within a short time another cloak room will be made available in this room.A new water equipment has also been installed. The little school now has a 160 gallon tank, and a new pump. The interiors of the schools have been repainted, and make a very attractive appearance.

PORTLAND, Maine, Sept. 15.—Hail-

"barometer" to the presidential elec-re-elected a United States Senator and elected their candidate for Governor majorities were piled up by the Re-

Democratic Governor Lewis Brann by approximately 4,000.GOP followers in the Pine State again followed the old saying: "As

United States in this presidential year of 1936, the only close battle of the five big contests, was that for United States Senator.With 39 precincts missing out of the blamed the authorized collector while others said that in their opinion it was the fault of scavengers.Secretary, William J. Lefferts, was

IS OUR CONSTITUTION ANTIQUATED?

By S. S. McCLURE

(Reprinted from Rural Progress Magazine)

Is the Constitution of the United States antiquated?
Is our Constitution, planned and written by our forefathers 147 years ago, suited to a nation so advanced in science and industry?Is the framework of our Government, set up to govern a population slightly more than 2,000,000 occupying approximately 100,000 square miles, suited to a nation of 126,000,000 inhabitants distributed over an area of 3,593,189 square miles?President Roosevelt, in a recent address (July 11), said:
"People require and people are demanding up-to-date government, in place of antiquated government, just as they are requiring and demanding Tri-borough bridges in the place of ancient ferries."Professor Tugwell said:
"Any people which must be governed according to the written codes of an instrument which defines the spheres of individual and group, State and Federal action, must expect to suffer from the constant maladjustment of progress. A life which changes and a constitution for governance which does not, must always raise questions which are difficult for solution."The changes he suggests are so radical that a greatly enlarged and nationalized police power would be necessary for enforcement.The objections to the Constitution are two-fold: first, as to the Federal framework; second, as to human rights.The Federal framework introduced by the Constitution to govern the original thirteen colonies was a new design in government.
To completely understand this system, we must start with the historical fact that the national Government was practically suspended of operating their automobiles while liquor.Testimony in all the cases was heard by Judges Hiram H. Keller and Calvin famous golfer-manufacturer, Zimmer Platt, of Chestnut Hill.Foulke told the Court, after being questioned, that he was arrested in Montgomery county on a similar charge some time ago but was acquitted when the Court directed the verdict.The officer who arrested Foulke testified that he found Foulke had run off the highway into a W. P. A. ditch.

Foulke said that he had been drinking in the afternoon before starting for Princeton for a reunion, and that when he found himself "getting drunk," he started home, and it was ployed on the farm of N. I. Rubinkam, pleaded guilty to driving while drunk on September 6th, on the Almshouse Road. He was sentenced to serve 30 days in the County Prison.When the accused drunken drivers were sentenced, Judge Keller had them lined up before the Bar of the Court and said:"A lecture does no good in the cases

HE'S A HUMAN KING

There seems to be a disposition on the part of British officialdom to soft-pedal the report that King Edward was tossed out of a skiff by the wake of a passing motor boat, in Greek waters.

We see no sense in any attempt to hush up the matter.

One of the chief reasons why the King is liked and admired all over the world is that he seems to want to live like other people, taking their risks and enjoying the same pleasures. Folks used to read with glee that he had tumbled out of a horse; and showed that he had what was needed to take it.

The world grinned when it was told he liked to dance with pretty girls, whether they were nobles or commoners, and he went up in public estimation because he did what any man prefers to do.

When Napoleon dressed himself as a corporal, though an Emperor, and pulled the ears of private soldiers, his popularity went up. But Napoleon was only play-acting.

King Edward's delight in the human touch is genuine; he has shown it all his life, and elevation to the throne has not changed him. And that is no small reason for the high regard in which he is held by everyone.

THREATS TO OUR WHEAT

Wheat growers will not be encouraged by the Government to cut acreage next year, Secretary of Agriculture Wallace told a press conference lately that other ways would be found to carry out the soil conservation program.

For the last four years the American wheat crops have been short as compared with former production. As a result the world's carry-over of wheat has fallen off and fear of world shortage has been expressed.

Under pressure of war propaganda, farmers of the United States expanded wheat production to more than a billion bushels. By 1932, the total crop amounted to 1,745,000,000 bushels. The following year the yield dropped to 529,000,000. Then came the drought of 1934 and the American wheat crop was only 496,000,000 bushels. Last year's crop was about 623,000,000 bushels.

News of drought conditions and the prolonged slump in production in this country has reached the farmers of Argentina. Nearing their season of wheat sowing, they are reported to be increasing their acreage.

These are some of the conditions that influence Secretary Wallace to modify the crop restriction program.

Farley said it would be a dirty campaign, but we don't imagine any of the candidates keeps a diary.

An onion growers' group is considering a publicity campaign of nationwide scope. It sounds feasible if the wind is with them.

Kansas Liquidates Bonded Indebtedness

Governor Landon's influence upon spending in the local governments in Kansas is an index of what may be expected if he is elected President. There will be a sudden tightening of the purse strings not only of the Federal Government but of the States, counties and municipalities.

Counties and communities in Kansas liquidated $22,000,000 worth of bonded indebtedness from 1932 to 1934. There was a net reduction of $17,000,000 in their bonded debt, new bonds being issued to the amount of $5,000,000, about half of which was for relief purposes.

The burden of local debt has increased in most States instead of being lightened as in Kansas.

The Musings of A Native Son--

A Weekly Commentary on Things of Local Interest which will appear each Tuesday in this column.

Last Thursday evening, I stood before an open casket in which reposed the earthly remains of an old friend, Lewis T. Rodan, and listened to the officers of Bristol Lodge of Elks, perform the funeral ceremonies. The service was beautiful and impressive. Reference was made to the "Golden Hour of Recollection," a custom inaugurated by the Elks, to keep forever green the memory of departed brethren. Immortality was the underlying thought that prompted every statement and the closing words expressed the hope, that somewhere, sometime, the chain of love which death has broken, may be reunited in that eternal existence, that begins beyond the grave.

Not only death but life itself is a great mystery. We are born into the world, we pass a short time in this earthly existence, and then death claims the physical body, and we pass on. The departure of a loved one is marked by intense grief. Kind words of sympathy cannot alleviate the sorrow of a bereaved heart. Time alone can overcome the loneliness that is felt after the loved one is laid away in the grave. But through the deepest suffering there appears a ray of sunshine, and we cling to the hope that the separation is not permanent, but that sometime we shall meet each other again.

I sometimes think that our hope of reunion beyond the grave would be greatly strengthened, if we could comprehend more fully, the complexity of our existence and the difference between things spiritual and things physical or earthly. We are told that when God created man he breathed into his nostrils the breath of life and he became a living soul. May we not believe, in other words, that in addition to his physical being, there is in man, a part of God himself that makes him a living soul, destined like his creator, to live an eternal existence. In consequence, we can say there is a quality in this body of ours. Not only has God given us a physical body, but of far greater importance, there is within us a spiritual entity, that is destined to live on after this earthly body is laid away in the grave. The mind is the seat of intelligence of this spiritual body or soul within us.

To me the human brain is nothing more than a physical organ, the same as the heart, the lungs, or the stomach. It has no power to think or to remember, but because there is such a wide gulf between things that are spiritual and things that are physical, it is necessary for the mind to have a medium of communication with the physical world. The physical brain, therefore, becomes the medium through which the mind contacts things that are physical or earthly. It must be obvious, that character, intelligence, personality are not elements of the physical body, but attributes of the spiritual entity that is within us. When the physical body during its earthly existence contains dies this spiritual entity will live on, and being clothed with a spiritual body will begin its eternal existence amid a new environment. When we can realize, that the physical body was born to die, but that the spiritual entity, or soul, or spirit, whatever we may desire to call it, that is co-existent with our physical body, is destined for an eternal existence, then the clouds of doubt are dispelled, and life beyond the grave becomes a certainty.

In the Apostles' Creed, we say: "He was crucified, dead and buried. He descended into hell, the third day He arose again." What we mean is that following His death upon the cross, Jesus in spirit form, went to hades, or hell, or Paradise, or Abraham's Bosom, or place of departed spirits, and in consummation of God's plan made ready for the resurrection of those disembodied spirits who awaited his coming, and when He arose they arose with Him (the Bible informs us that many were seen by mortal eyes), and being clothed with spiritual bodies, accompanied Him to the place of their eternal abode. Because Jesus with His resurrected body, was known by His disciples, we can assume that the spiritual body designed for eternal existence, will follow the form of the present physical body, which gives us the convincing assurance that we shall know each other in that life beyond. With the resurrection of Jesus the old things passed away and a new era began. Paul must have understood the changes when he said: "To be absent from the body is to be present with the Lord." And so we of today, have every possible reason to believe, that when the physical body ceases to function, the spiritual entity within us, which is our real self, will be immediately clothed with an immortal body and begin its eternal existence.

Of course, these views are contingent upon one's belief in a God as the creator and preserver of the universe. To some of us, there are experiences that come in our journey through life, that bring us an abiding faith in a personal God. Such an experience came to me some years ago. A relative had been a partial invalid for many years. Her body was frail and weak and it seemed that she would be unable to survive a severe illness. One winter she contracted pneumonia and her physician held out no hope for her recovery. One day as she approached the crisis of the disease, she sent for me. When we were alone she said she realized that she was seriously ill and that human help could do nothing more, and she said she had sent for me to ask that I kneel by her bedside and ask God to spare her life. I took her hand in mine and offered up a simple prayer, that God might listen to her petition, and if it were in accord with His divine will, that He would spare her life and restore her soon to her usual health and strength. In a very short time she showed signs of improvement and to the surprise of her physician, in a few days was on the road to recovery. A skeptic might say, it was just a coincidence, she would have recovered anyway. But to my relative and me, it was a direct answer to prayer and proved the existence of a personal God, who listens to our petitions and answers prayers. And so as I looked upon the physical body of Bro. Rodan, prepared for burial, I thought of it not as the perishes of the spiritual entity that is within us. When the physical body during its earthly existence contains the real man. The personality I knew as Brother Rodan was not there. He had passed through the mystery of death and with a new body had begun his eternal existence. The chain of love which the Exalted Ruler of the Elks had referred to, and which has been broken so many times as loved ones have passed over, has been reunited, and with those loved ones gone before, he will await the coming of those he left behind.

I have endeavored in presenting these views, to approach the subject from a feasible, possible and practicable angle. My object has been twofold. First, to prove the soundness, sureness and certainty of the Christian belief in a life beyond the grave; and secondly, to show how the Christian is fortified in his belief, that following the death of his physical being, his soul is immediately clothed with a spiritual body, and he begins his eternal existence in his new environment.

IS OUR CONSTITUTION ANTIQUATED?

from 1776 to 1789, and that the State Legislatures, when the Constitutional Convention met, were all-powerful.

The States had long been political institutions as Colonies, and long had systems of self-government; they refused to endow the Continental Congress with real power or authority where men or dollars were involved.

The problem that confronted the Constitutional Convention was how to create one nation out of a group of nations.

This was accomplished by dividing the sovereign powers into three parts—some were given to the Federal Government, some were retained by the States, and the others were denied both the Federal and State governments and were retained by the people.

And so a form of government was set up until then unknown and until then deemed impossible.

James Bryce said: "The Constitution ranks above every other written Constitution for the intrinsic excellence of its scheme, its adaption to the circumstances of the people. The simplicity, brevity and precision of its language. Its judicious mixture of definitions in principle and elasticity in details."

The American Constitution is just as modern as any written in the Twentieth Century.

The Constitution of the United States is not only a framework of government and a statement of duties and powers of government, but beyond all this it is a contract between the people of the United States and the same people as citizens of the individual thirteen States when each was a sovereign, independent nation.

It ENUMERATES rather than DEFINES the powers of government.

Thus attacks on the Constitution resolve themselves to the simple question as to how many sovereign powers the national Government should have and how many sovereign powers should be kept by the States.

The basic principle, the fundamental new conception of a nation with divided sovereignties, has been amply justified by the experience of many nations.

Canada in 1867, and Australia in 1901, were unable to improve this invention.

In devising a national government for India, the British are unable to improve in any essential the framework of government as found in the American Constitution.

The ingenuity of man has been unable to change or even modify any of the framework and its essential principles without making it less perfect.

Through all our history, the universal sentiment has been against depriving the States of sovereign rights which they retained when the Federal Government was established.

"GLITTERING GIRL" by MAY CHRISTIE

CHAPTER XXXVI

"Well, if you insist on leaving, and not giving me a fair chance to win my money back, you can just wait right here for me till I fix my hair and powder my nose." Mrs. Tyson departed. She was gone for fully five minutes.

The three of them were almost at the front door when they were halted in their tracks by a sudden and alarming knocking from outside. Almost at the same moment, warning bells whirled upstairs in the gambling rooms, and a great iron door swung to at the top of the stairs, cutting off that part of the house from the invaders.

"The police! The raid's on!" Terry said sharply.

"Oh, Lord!" gasped Mrs. Tyson, thoroughly alarmed. She clutched her arm. "For heaven's sake, get us away quickly!"

He refrained from the obvious answer that had been his earnest wish for the past ten minutes or more. The pounding on the door grew louder. A stentorian voice demanded that it be opened in the name of the law.

"They'll smash it down. They'll take us to jail. Oh, Mr. Shannon," moaned Sadie, "hide us away! This is terrible!"

"Follow me," said Terry. "I know this house. The previous owners were friends of mine. As I remember, there's a trick door in the cellar that leads through into the house on the left. The Nordstroms live there. I've met them once or twice."

"Oh, take us there! Get us away!"

"Come!"

They followed Terry into the kitchen quarters which were empty, the help having dashed upstairs at the first sound of the knocking on the front door.

"Here are the stairs leading to the cellar," Terry switched a light on. Vernon, guiding her mother who was trembling violently, followed him.

They found themselves in a big cellar. "Come on—through this archway—it's dark. In there—I'll strike a match." They entered a smaller cellar hung with cobwebs and very dirty.

"Oh, Mr. Shannon, the police are smashing the front door in upstairs. Oh, hurry!" urged Sadie.

"See—here's the door in the wall. It's going to be a tight squeeze getting through. Let's hope it isn't bolted on the other side. Apparently it hasn't been used in years."

Terry tugged at the rusty bolt. It was obstinate, but with repeated assaults it yielded.

"Thank heaven for that!" Another violent tug. The little door flew open, revealing Stygian darkness. "I'll go through first," said Terry, "then Mrs. Tyson—and then you, Vernon."

Terry's broad shoulders jammed at first. But, with many jerks and wiggles, he contrived to get through at last.

Poor Sadie had a terrible time because of her stoutness, and the nervous tension that possessed her. She struggled frantically, goaded by the noise the police were making upstairs.

"Oh, it hurts! I can't!" With Vernon pushing from behind, and Terry hauling lustily, her beautiful orchid gown was being almost torn from her body!

"I've stuck. I can't get through. Pull me back, Vernon."

"No. Wiggle yourself. Like an eel, darling."

"Ouch! Oh! I'm moving!" Terry was winning the battle. With a final pull that tore the orchid gown almost from stem to stern, she landed in the darkness on the other side.

"Splendid! Not hurt, are you, Mrs. Tyson?"

"No. Only shaken a bit. Get Vernon through, hurry."

Vernon's slim figure had little difficulty in getting through the aperture.

"We'll shut this door but we won't bolt it, because someone may try this means of escape too," said Terry. He struck a match. They were in the rear of the cellar in the next door house. They followed him through a pile of rubbish into a clearer space and up some stone stairs.

"I'm afraid we're going to scare the Nordstroms by our unconventional arrival," Terry grinned. They walked through the kitchen premises out into a hallway, which had lights burning.

"Who's there?"—in a man's voice from above.

"It's I, Terry Shannon, with some friends. Come down, and I'll explain, Mr. Nordstrom."

A tall figure in a dressing gown descended. Mr. Nordstrom and his wife had been aroused from sleep by the noises of the raiding party in the street below their windows.

Terry, a twinkle in his Irish blue eyes, told him of their predicament. They had exited from the gambling house into this haven of refuge!

"Well, I'll be d—!" Mr. Nordstrom grinned as he viewed the extremely dirty and disheveled trio. The stout little lady was the worst. Her hair was hanging down her back, a cobweb lay across her nose, and her gown was ripped in a dozen places.

"I'll tell my wife. Come on upstairs and fix up a little."

The Nordstroms were extremely kind. It was a good half hour before they would permit their unexpected visitors to take their leave. "Better stay indoors till the row's over," Mr. Nordstrom declared sensibly.

Then Terry drove Vernon and her mother home. Mrs. Tyson declaring over and over that he had been "a perfect angel," saving them from scandal in the papers (the thing she dreaded most) and that she could never, never thank him enough for what he had done for them that night.

Jake Tyson was waiting for them in the drawing room of the apartment. He had been uneasy, somehow. He was relieved when he heard the key turn in the lock.

His wife immediately burst into an excited account of their recent experience.

"And this young man came all the way up there to get us out of it," she shrilled, "I call it fine of him. Go on, Jake, and thank him."

Now Jake had only met Terry Shannon once before, but he had taken a liking to the young chap. Where men were concerned, Jake was a good and quick reader of character.

"We'll have a little drink to celebrate the occasion," he said heartily. "Then you, Sadie, get directly to your bed. You're all het up."

Shortly after Sadie had retired, Jake made a sly excuse and left the young folks together. He could see that Vernon really liked this young man. She had come through a nasty experience with "Prince Karloff." But here was a clean-cut young American, a "square shooter."

From the dining room where he sat with his newspaper, he could hear the continuous murmur of their voices. They had a very great deal to say to each other. That was evident.

"I want you to know everything about my—my experiences with the man—how I came to spend the night in his apartment. He had drugged me," Vernon was saying haltingly to Terry.

Terry was holding both her hands tight in his own. "I love you, Vernon. I loved you right from the very beginning."

'HOKEY' LEIGHTON WINS NINTH STRAIGHT FIGHT

"Hokey" Leighton, representing the Bucks County Rescue Squad, won his ninth straight fight in the St. Ann's outdoor arena, last night, when he took a close decision from Mike O'Brien, Shackamaxon, in the amateur boxing show held by the St. Ann's Athletic Association.

The final round of the contest gave the decision to the Croydon youth. He won the initial round with his continual weaving and bobbing and then lost the second when O'Brien began to fight in close. Leighton changed his style of fighting in the last session and won out handily, staggering his foe with a hard right before the bell.

Vince Della, local southpaw, was mastered by James "Happy" Riddle, Sun Village, in the windup. Riddle's counterpunching carried him to victory. Della was the aggressor throughout but the Chester youth's waiting and hard blows to the body carried him to the triumph. Riddle proved to be more clever than the resident boy.

"Jimmy" Quigley, lanky youth from the Germantown Boys' Club, made his Bristol debut by finishing Joseph Ward, Lloyd A. C., after two minutes and twenty-six seconds of the initial frame. A right cross to the jaw proved to be the fatal punch for the Chester fighter.

Karl Schmead and Benny Arizzi put up the best scrap of the night. These gloves went at each other from the start and never let up with both getting in some very nice punches. Arizzi carried the first two rounds while the Nativty boy rallied in the final canto but not enough to take the win away from Arizzi.

A towel from the corner of Rocco Mattio, Arena, quickly stopped his fight with Joseph Jackson, Lloyd. Jackson merely socked Mattio a few times and he went down. It was evident that he was going to receive a bad licking so his seconds stopped the fight.

The Fromel brothers from the Lloyd Club were both successful. James defeated Angelo Ambrosio, unattached, in a corking three rounder in which lack of experience caused Ambrosio to lose while Eddie Fromel beat Albert Davis, Shackamaxon. The second round of this bout was the only one in which the boys stood toe to toe and battled it out.

Even though he floored his opponent at the end of the first session, Tommy Brown, Shackamaxon, had a hard job in beating Robert Adams, Arena. The bell saved the colored boy but he came back in the second and third sessions to batter Brown but not enough to cop the decision. Brown's left to the body hurt Adams on several occasions.

In other bouts, Arthur Hasefras, Germantown, defeated William Toth, Eleventh Ward, Camden; and Forster McNair, Chester Boys' Club, was beaten by Nathaniel Hines, Arena, in a bout which was more of a burlesque than boxing.

Officials were: Referee, Ray Belmont; timer, Joe Palermo; judges, David Madden and Nathan Lipschultz; clerk, Frank Percival; physician, Joseph Levy; announcer, Patsey Moffo. It was the 2000th fight in which Lipschultz has officiated as a judge.

Drunken Drivers Lectured After Court Hears Cases

Life seems pretty cheap to you; the problem seems to be beyond the control of the Court. When college graduates go out and drink and drive cars, what can you expect of others. In your case, Mrs. Topal, you deserve a reprimand. You are married, have two children and a mother living with you. You are a fine specimen to be a mother!

Peter Sterner, 54, of Bensalem township, pleaded guilty to a charge of unlawful possession of liquor on his farm when it was raided on July 7 by County Detective Antonio Russo and Agents of the Liquor Control Board. He was sentenced by Judge Boyer to pay a fine of $300 and costs or serve three months in the County Prison.

Council Discusses Littering of Streets

Request for a sign permit from J. S. Fine was referred to street and highway committee with power to act.

Communication was received from Howard I. James, borough solicitor, in which he advised that he had been unable to contact the owner of the properties on Otter street about which complaint has been made and which council has been endeavoring to have razed. The matter was left in the hands of the third ward councilmen in conjunction with the borough solicitor and to report at the next meeting.

Councilmen absent were Williams, Wichser and Fallon.

POSTPONE FIGHTS BOOKED FOR WEDNESDAY

CROYDON, Sept. 15—Adhering to the policy of giving the patrons of the Croydon Arena nothing but real fights, a policy that the management has put in force with its opening show, the bouts that were to be put on tomorrow night were called off.

The reason for this postponement was due to the fact that all the major clubs in and around Philadelphia, have entered their fighters in the boxing tournament to be held at the Seymour Club, 10th and Washington avenue, Philadelphia, September 14th to the 16th, inclusive.

All the starlights of the various clubs, are booked to appear in this three day tournament, and suitable matches with boys who were to appear here, were hard to match. Rather than put on a show that was inferior to the standard of the Arena policy, Matchmaker Mickey Gordon decided to call off the show entirely. A show could have been had, but as the majority of the boys who were not entered in this tournament were of no proven ability, the management did not want to take the chance of running under these conditions.

However, the next set of real fights will be held on Wednesday, September 23rd. Matchmaker Mickey Gordon has already lined up most of his bouts with heavyweights, featuring a star card. The cream of the tournament talent will appear here with boys who have shown their ability in and around this vicinity, and a real card of fights is to be seen on the next show.

Chester Castor, who is entered in this tournament in the 112 pound class, hopes to bring to Bristol the first championship ever to be won by a local lad. These are some of the boys who are already signed up for the next show: Frank Donofrio, Bob Robinson, Joe Sheckler, Walter Padlo, Frankie Craig, William Crawford, Benny Lamonica, Chester Castor, Jack Carter, Joe Shanky, and Harry Draber.

Up before dawn, we got coffee from a thermos bottle and were at the airport by 6 o'clock but the Portuguese kept us until eight with endless formalities. Over in the bay was anchored the German vessel "Kamerun" which had been shot at and stopped by a Madrid warship, an incident which led Germany to send a powerful part of her navy to the Mediterranean. The sound of heavy guns firing came from the bay but the Portuguese said it was only the Portuguese navy target shooting.
